E-NEWSLETTER

Greetings from the Executive Director

Thirty years ago, Alison stood before those attending the National Adoption Center's anniversary party and whispered, "I want to thank the Adoption Center for finding me a family...because without them, I wouldn't have one. The Center had found a loving home for Alison with a lesbian from West Virginia.

Those were the days when social workers were reluctant to place a child with a gay man or a lesbian. Today, the climate has changed; the 2010 Census reveals that in some states more than 20% of children are being brought up by gay or lesbian parents. And studies consistently show that children raised by members of the LGBT community are well adjusted, have successful peer relations and do well in school.

The Center continues to be a leader in LGBT adoption. Its outreach program, funded by the Wells Fargo Foundation, encourages gay men and lesbians to consider adopting, and works with adoption agencies to help them create a comfortable environment for those considering adoption.

Our efforts are leading to more homes for children like Alison who wait for families to adopt them and to the creation of loving families no matter the sexual orientation of the parents.

WHAT WE ARE WORKING ON

More than 40 cities in this country feature children waiting to be adopted in the media, mainly on television. The programs are generally called "Wednesday's Child." Because children in so many more cities could benefit from such programs, the Center has created "Wednesday's Child USA" to expand the feature throughout the country and is promoting an Adoption Community where adoption agencies with existing features can share best practice information.

The Center will be orchestrating quarterly webinars on such subjects as: Preparing Children for Media Recruitment; Tips on Working with the Media; Preparing Foster Parents for their Children's Media Appearances. Anyone interested in receiving the Center's new Wednesday's Child USA newsletter can contact Alexandra Buczek at abuczek@adopt.org

OF NOTE

Ken Mullner, our executive director, has been elected treasurer of Voice for Adoption, a national organization that develops and advocates for improved adoption policies with federal and state legislators.

Mullner is parent to two children, one of them adopted.
